

Musical Chairs Gift Exchange Game

How to Play:

Have everyone bring a white elephant gift or a new gift with a set value amount. The gifts should come wrapped and ready to play with no names on the packages. Spread out the gifts placing one gift on each chair.

The chairs can be set up in a traditional musical chair arrangement, or just spread the group out however your layout works such as around tables or across your family room couches. The key is to know what spots are available with no extra seats around, as that can make it confusing when the group is shuffling and looking for a spot.

Explain the rules to the group before you begin, so everyone understands how to play. Then, start by calling out one "If you..." statement from the questions list.

You can print out the list and cut and fold each of the strips and place them in the jar or just grab a pen and cross off the questions you have already read. You can let those from the group take turns grabbing a slip and calling out the questions to add to the fun.

When the question applies to individuals in the group, they will need to stand and quickly find a new spot around the room where someone else also stood up. Everyone will leave the gifts with the chair they started at.

This will encourage the participants to quickly move and look for a gift that looks appealing to them before someone else snags the spot. If one or no one stands for a question, the person sits back down in the same spot and play continues. Keep reading off "If you..." questions until just a couple of questions are left.

Page 4-5 – Questions for Teens/Adults (Color)

Page 6-7 – Questions for Kids (B/W)

Page 8-9 – Questions for Teens/Adults (B/W)

You can mix and match questions from both sets. If you have a family gathering with a mix of ages, you might print on different colored paper and let the kids mix up on the kids questions and the adults move on the older questions.
